Most suicide attempts are expressions of extreme distress, not harmless bids for attention. A person who appears suicidal should not be left alone and needs immediate mental-health treatment. Seeking help is a sign of strength.

If you are concerned, go with your instincts, get help!

Suicidal behavior is complex. Some risk factors vary with age, gender, or ethnic group and may occur in combination or change over time.

Risk factors for suicide include:

- depression and other mental health disorders, or a substance-abuse disorder (often in combination with other mental disorders)
- prior suicide attempt
- family history of mental disorder, substance abuse or suicide
- family violence, including physical or sexual abuse
- firearms in the home
- incarceration
- exposure to the suicidal behavior of others, such as family members, peers, or media figures.

Suicide and suicidal behavior are not normal responses to stress; many people have these risk factors, but are not suicidal.

The following are some of the signs you might notice in yourself or a friend that may be reason for concern.

Warning Signs for suicide include:

- Feelings of hopelessness or worthlessness
- Persistent depressed mood
- Very poor self esteem or strong sense of guilt
- Not wanting to participate in family or social activities
- Changes in sleeping and eating patterns: too much or too little
- Feelings of anger, rage, need for revenge
- Feeling exhausted most of the time
- Trouble with concentration, problems academically or socially in school
- Feeling listless, irritable
- Regular and frequent crying
- Not taking care of one’s self
- Reckless, impulsive behaviors
- Frequent physical symptoms such as headaches or stomach aches
- Increased alcohol or drug use
- “Making Plans” to end one’s life: giving away belongs, obtaining items that might kill oneself (medications, weapons)
- Threatening to commit suicide or expressing a desire to die

FOR SURVIVORS OF SUICIDE

The loss of a loved one is tragic and often seems unbearable. When a loved one commits suicide, the grief experience can be more complex than that of normal grief and loss. Survivors of suicide experience a variety of intense emotions. These feelings may come and go, with no discernible pattern, and sometimes it may seem as if they will never relent. Some of these emotions may include:

- Shock: Disbelief and emotional numbness, as though the suicide didn’t really happen.
- Anger: With the deceased, or with self and others for not preventing the suicide.
- Guilt: Wondering “What if?” or thinking of ways that they could have prevented the suicide. This commonly leads to self-blame for the loss.
- Despair: Overwhelming sadness, depression or hopelessness. These symptoms might manifest physically as well.

Other possible reactions include: nightmares, flashbacks, difficulty concentrating, social withdrawal and loss of interest in normal activities.

If you are a Survivor of Suicide

- Reach out to your loved ones for support. Surround yourself with friends and family who will listen when you need to talk offer a comforting presence when you need quiet.
- Give yourself time. Healing takes time – sometimes a long time.
- Don’t rush your healing process, or let others rush it for you.
- Know that some days will be better than others, even years later.
- Consider a support group for survivors of suicide. Having support from others who know what you’re experiencing can be very helpful.

If your grief is intense, unrelenting or leads to physical problems, consider speaking with your doctor or a mental health provider especially if you begin to feel suicidal or intensely depressed.
